The expedition sailed from San Francisco on July 8, 1881, and headed north into the treacherous waters of the Arctic Circle. Along the way, they encountered numerous challenges, including ice floes, blizzards, and extreme cold. Despite these obstacles, De Long and his crew persevered, determined to fulfill their mission.

The Journal: A First-Hand Account

Throughout the expedition, De Long meticulously kept a journal, recording his observations, experiences, and challenges. This journal provides an invaluable first-hand account of the expedition, offering readers a glimpse into the daily lives and struggles of these brave explorers.

De Long's entries are both descriptive and introspective. He describes the stunning beauty of the Arctic landscape, the challenges of navigating through treacherous ice, and the camaraderie among the crew. He also shares his thoughts on the dangers they faced and the importance of perseverance.

The Fate of the Jeannette

On September 12, 1881, the Jeannette became trapped in ice off the coast of Siberia. For months, the ship drifted helplessly, carried by the currents. The crew eventually abandoned the ship and set out on foot across the ice. However, they encountered severe weather and a lack of food, leading to a tragic end for many of them.

De Long and a small group of survivors managed to reach land but were forced to endure months of hardship before they were rescued. Only 13 members of the original crew survived the expedition.
