Growing Up Activist

Malala Yousafzai was born in the Swat Valley of Pakistan in 1997. Her father was a schoolteacher, and her mother was a homemaker. Malala grew up in a conservative Muslim family, but her parents were open-minded and encouraged her to pursue her education. Malala started speaking out for the rights of girls at a young age. She wrote a blog for the BBC about her experiences living under the Taliban, and she spoke out against the group's ban on girls' education. In 2012, Malala was shot in the head by the Taliban for speaking out. She survived the attack and went on to become a global activist for girls' education.

Fighting for Social Justice
